Teaching and learning with a difference

The Green School at the Kul Kul Campus, near Ubud, links learning to life and aims for life-long moral and intellectual growth. This is the school that will teach the generations to come – the next generation of leaders – social and environmental responsibility. They envision a generation that has never used a plastic bag. One that doesn't know the word "organic" because all food is, and one that thinks the developing world is synonymous with environmental leadership. The Green School is a non-profit, 21st-century model embracing sustainable practices in education and entrepreneurship and opens in the fall of 2008. Isn't it time that education took the lead?
